Describe the invention briefly. Include its operation, purpose, environment, and new elements (e.g. components, process steps, network configuration) and how problem(s) were solved.

The invention will provide a means for the cellular service provider to track cellular plan minutes, by category (i.e. anytime, nights and weekends, etc.), and to provide status of plan minutes to the customer automatically or on request. Information may be made available to the customer via a method such as a text message from the provider to the customers cellular phone, customer access to an Internet website, or any other viable method. This invention also includes tracking and notification of minutes through hardware design where cellular phone call timers would be configured to track minutes based on time of day and to split minutes into separate "time of day" call timers. The configuration could include a method for programming the customers phone based on the customers unique calling plan setup and plan minutes.
